Dear Professor Brandon,

This is Lauren Cosby from your English 111 class. I am sorry for missing class today, but I had a family emergency that I needed to attend to. I know that the draft for our reflective letter is due today and I can email you my draft today for the credit.

Thank you,

Lauren Cosby.

Lauren,

You were missed today.

Contact another student for the notes from class, or you can stop by my office hours to discuss (231 Massey, MW 12:00-3:00).

Today, the class worked in groups to combine their post draft outlines of their draft into an "ideal," outline of the reflective cover letter. In the process, each group created a mindmap of their ideal paper--one which combine the best ideas about organization, points to be made, and evidence. Each mindmap contained the points made in their ideal paper and a suggestion of one or two pieces of evidence which could be used to support each point. Again, contact members of your group for photos of all three mindmaps, as most folks took pictures before leaving. These will make a great artifact for your upcoming mid-term portfolio. Mindmaps like the one produced today can be useful in revising your current draft for Friday and as a pre-drafting technique.

On Friday, make sure to bring a copy of your current draft and your post draft outline of your last draft to class, so I can give you credit for them. These will also make good artifacts for your portfolio.

Homework for Friday is to visit a Reynolds library and spend at least thirty minutes exploring it. You must check out a book and bring the book to class Friday as proof of having visited. While there, make sure to visit the reference section containing our collection of books which can help inform your goals and plans in terms of a career. Talk to a research librarian to find out where this collection is.

I hope you are doing well,

Steve
